Many physics students display serious difficulties in coping especially in their beginning semesters. The University of Osnabrück has established a program of continuous support which serves both as emergency help and as dedicated program for identifying and addressing learning problems.

The talk will describe the details of the program and try to identify the factors that made it an overwhelming success.